OF JOHNSTONE'S BOOK

The London World reviews Arthur

Johnstone's book as follows: The apparently exhaustless output of Stevensoniana" has received a really valuable contribution in Mr. Arthur Johnstone's Recollections of Robert Louis Stevenson in the Pacific (Chatto & Windus, 6s.) Granting to the full alike as a man and a man of letters one is constrained to admit that, in the written about him in both capacities in the eleven years which have elapsed since his death. Mr. Johnstone, . however, is in a wholly different category intimate and fairly complete narrative of the whole period of Stevenson's life of "exile" in the Pacific, from his arrival there in 1888 until the time of his death; and it is written from the point of view of one who, while a devoted admirer both of the man and his work. worship to blind him to the limitations and mistakes of his subject, or to the defects of those qualities which went to BLAMEDASEPT. 18 ALAMEDASEPT. 20 the making of a singularly attractive MERRASEPT. 27 SONOMASEPT. 26 character and personality. There is the method of Stevenson's intervention ference in the affairs of Samoa, and his natural unfitness for participation in political life, which will be recognized as not less just than the accompanying cordial tribute to the strenuous sincerity and passionate love of justice in which all his indiscretions had their origin and mainspring. The lovable nature of the man, his unfailing sympathy and everything that was "lovely and of good report," his largeness and tenderness of heart, and the long-drawn pathos of his struggle against bodily S. S. Nevadan, to sail Sept. 5 infirmity and ever-threatening death S. S. Nabraskan, to sail Sept. 26 , have nowhere been brought into more impressive relief than in this volume of recollections, which teems with facts, anecdotes, and records of views and opinions throwing fresh light not among the islands of the Pacific, but upon his mind, character, idiosyncrasies, and genius. On the subject of his literary product during these closing years of his life Mr. Johnstone writes with sound judgment; and the chapter which discusses his unfinished and proected work is one of the most interesting and suggestive in a volume which no admirer of Stevenson the au-

It is quite possible that when the records are made up the southern Jewish soldier will have quite as proud a record as his brother of the north, whom prominent men took pains lately to honor. Wherever the Jew heard the call for duty he answered, and it is a wonder that in the south, where old-time loyalty and consideration still hold sway, some attempt has not been made to do justice to the memory of those men who took the field at the call of their state.-Baltimore Jewish Comment.
